Increase in Life Expectancy From Age 1 to 85 Due to Elimination of Ischemia Other circulatory Cerebrovascular Ischemia Other circulatory Cerebrovascular Health The decrease in life expectancy throughout much of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union during the late 1960 s and early 1970 s raises questions about factors--environment, living standards, life style, and quality and availability of health care services--that influence the health status of these populations. The health status of the elderly is particularly pertinent, insofar as the elderly typically place the greatest demands on health care systems in terms of usage and public cost. Unfortunately, current knowledge of the health status of populations in this report suffers from a lack of data and the insufficient attention that has been given to compiling and linking sources...
